Drought affects Univ. in southeastern U.S.

Atlanta, GA (CPS) — The severe drought and hot weather throughout the region has caused significant water shortages in many areas. In Georgia, officials have reported that water levels in the state's major reservoirs have dropped to 30% of their normal capacity. The University of Georgia has already had to reduce water use by 20% and is considering implementing further conservation measures. In neighboring states, water agencies are also reporting critical water shortages. The drought has had a significant impact on agriculture, with many farmers facing crop failures and reduced yields. The situation is expected to worsen as the summer progresses.

Newark, NJ, Nov. 16 (CPS) — The Newark Public Schools have announced the opening of the New Technology High School, a magnet school for students interested in STEM education. The school has received a $5 million grant from the federal government to purchase state-of-the-art technology and equipment. Applications for admission are now being accepted, and the school will begin operations in the fall of 2016. Interested students are encouraged to apply online at the school's website.

Universities receive record grants

NEW YORK, N.Y., Nov. 15, 2016 (CPS) — Gifts to the nation's colleges and universities reached a record $36 billion last year, according to the Higher Education Price Index, a report published by the Council for Financial Aid to Education. The report shows that the average student's education costs rose by 4.6% last year, with the largest increases occurring in private colleges and universities. As a result, the average cost of a public four-year college increased by 3.3%.

But not all campus programs benefit from corporate support. Faculty at Indiana University, for instance, are concerned that the disproportionate amount of money from foundations and private sources is obscuring a broader picture of the financial health of the university. They argue that a more diversified funding model would be better for the long-term stability of the institution.
HELP WANTED

"School newspaper (Technology News) seeks fun loving, well motivated students looking for a good time and (relatively) easy money. Interest in newspaper reporting and production desirable. Willingness to have a good time and earn extra money a plus. Previous experience not required. On the job training provided. Excellent opportunity for advancement. For information call ext. 3085 any Friday afternoon during the regular semester."

Help wanted? You better believe it! IIT's student newspaper needs you! Due to graduations, promotions, and transfers we have several openings for paste-up personnel, typists, and writers. If you were active on your high school paper or yearbook, or if you have an interest in learning newspaper production, check us out. We don't require that you have any previous experience, since we provide all the necessary training. What we do require is a desire to learn and a willingness to work in a team environment to produce a quality product.

Since we are a student publication however, there are a few things you should know. First, we are not all work and no play. Our staff members like to have a good time while they are working. Some of them have a rather unusual sense of humor, but this makes things more interesting. Second, we get paid for what we do. That's right, paid. All staff positions are paid, so you do have to put some effort into what you do. This makes it very unusual combination: You get paid to do what you enjoy doing (assuming that you applied because you like the work and not for the lure of easy money) and you work with people who like to have fun on the job. It almost boggles the mind.

If Technology News sounds like your kind of student activity, stop by and see us on Friday afternoons during the regular semester. Someone on the staff will more than happy to explain our operation to you. If you can't stop by, give us a call at 307-3085. We are ready to listen to you.

The Rolling Reverend
by Omar Sichell

I sat in the boss’s chair that August afternoon drinking his Scotch, looking out his window with my pen using my left eye, when he came through the door. He casually tossed his hat at Sylvie over my secretary, and kissed the hatrack.

“Nice going, sir.” I said quickly and tiptoed over and tickled it off on his blotters and replacing it in the stand. “Pretty soon you’ll have that down and...”

“Good afternoon, Bimsley,” he said. “ Shut up,” he added.

“Yes sir. How did the Anderson case go?”

He walked over to the coatrack and hung up his coat. “Pretty well. Bimsley. I still think you have to get a new name and a new mannerism...Chipperwick used the stilled Wille E. Coyote doll to do his employer. I’m still having a problem breaking her all for that week.”

“Yes sir. While trying to put my sock back on without noticing. I mean, having forty people seeing her commit murder for the first time. You, sir. How do you think you’re going to break that?”

He got up out of his chair and sat down. “I figure it’s like the York case we had three years ago. You remember Yes sir. York jumped out of the fifth floor window into a plate of glass and pretended he was dead. Under the bed and the bank of all the calendars. But you caught him, sir.”

“Of course. They don’t call me Sam Spade for nothing. you know.”

“My name is Ken Clufitl.”

“Shut up. Bimsley.”

“I hadn’t gotten him again. Ken Clufitl was indeed his name, no matter how hard he tried to forget that fact. And I was Bimsley. His faithful sidekick, kickboxing bag, valet, chauffeur, and houseboy. Sure, it was a hard job, but just to be around Ken Clufitl, the greatest living detective in all of New York City. And indeed, was the best reward I could get. At least, that’s what he said when I asked him about a regular salary.

I got up off the floor and found him examining a sock under a magnifying glass. “Bimsley.”

“Yes sir!”

He looked over at me and down at my bare foot. “Here. I found this sock under my desk. It looks like it fit you. But be sure to return to whoever it belongs to as soon as I find out who that exactly is.”

As usual, I took the sock. Knowing Ken, he may have found another sock under his desk. Just then, Sylvia came into the office.

“Bimsley, there’s a Rolling Reverend here to see you. He doesn’t have an appointment.”

He sat up, straightened his hair, and pinched back his tie with his hand. “Give him one and send him in. And Bimsley, put that sock on. There’s a smell in here that could crack convos.”

I quickly put on the sock and assumed my normal position in the office. Ken had me stop that and sit over by my desk instead. As he buckled my shirt and sat down, the Reverend entered.

“Your expression was that he didn’t look like a priest. In fact, he did look like a game show host. He had hair on him that must have been set in concrete (a crack did appear), and he had on that looked like union and air-raid pins. His three-piece suit said it all the way, and I guessed he had on the wrong suit that said the same thing. The man was immaculate. Maybe that’s why he’s a tax man.”

Rev. Roller looked at me and smiled. I was temporarily blinded, but I only heard him say “Mr. Clufitl?”

“Never mind him,” Ken said. “I’m Clufitl, Ken Clufitl. What can I do for you, Father?”

He shifted his smile over to Ken, and Ken winced. “I hear you have a problem with your church. I want to help youiez inferent and reputable investigator.”

Ken rubbed his eyes. “Yes, I am.”

Rev. Roller smiled again, but Ken looked away in surprise. “Oh, I can’t help you. A robbery may have happened and a murder may happen having a look about. After discussion had ended between them, Thomas took back to his two crewmen watching by the truck. “I didn’t know the deal, boss?” asked Brian Rolles, first crew member, by seniority.

“Okay, you can take off right here. Stan, you can start in the back courtyard, and I got to get around front. We’re going to have to gather the rest for those plans. I guess we’re all going to gather around.”

“Hey, Jake, how bad is the back?”

“All right, Stan. Nothing to high paint off to the law there, boy. I swear you picked the wrong profession.”

“Sure, boss.”

“Where’s the rest of the paint anyway?”

“They said we didn’t need more than this. Those jerks have got to get a new estimator. This guy doesn’t know what he’s doing!”

Two hours and fifteen minutes had passed and the sun had come down. The three were in their respective locations, on ladders, doorsways, on windows. Break time had come and the trio was happy to sit down for fifteen minutes and have a quickie.

“This place is a pain to paint. I don’t know who painted before, but they didn’t know anything about painting. I know you, I spilled some of my paint on them, and then this guy came out, yelling at me most respectable for property and shit like that. This is some weird church if you ask me, I like when we leave alone to get the stuff done.”

“Yeah, you think it got it bad? I’m up some ladder in a graveyard, I got out there and this plaque. It’s just these two who got it bad.”

physical plant director Don Mott. Last week, MSU was in the middle of a serious heat wave, which has led to a reduction in the number of scheduled outdoor activities.

Administrators, though, generally don’t think this will affect students, who are still taking classes and participating in athletic events. They believe the heat will not be a major issue.

On the other hand, University of Texas at Austin faculty members are concerned about the heat wave, which has led to a decrease in the number of classes being offered.

In addition, the heat wave has led to an increase in the cost of air conditioning, which has caused a reduction in the amount of money available for something about a robbery as well?"

"Yes. My accountant, Simon Fischer, has been avoiding me lately, and I feel something is wrong with the books."

"Maybe we just didn't own a pair of sunglasses, I thought to myself. "Where is your group setup now, sir?" I asked.

"We've set up a group of tents in a field just outside the city, about thirty minutes away. If you want, we can go there now in my car..."

"Not just yet, sir," I said. "If the preacher started getting religious in the car, we'd have no way out short of jumping out of the windows, which would be rude. "We have to..."

"Ken jumped in, "We have to finish the spring cleaning of our arsenal."" Did we give the Reverend the directions?" "One, he asks, "Where can I get more scotch, Brumley? I seem to have run out."

"The corner store, sir. Are we going to take the case?"

"Ken scratched his nose and frowned. "I suppose the supposedly dead maid can wait for now. Why don't you go on ahead and meet the Reverend. I have to go down and get some scotch and a new blanket. This one is a mess."

Baseball to begin

Last year's baseball season ended sometime after the end of our spring semester. During this time, the baseball team advanced to the NAIA State Playoffs by winning 12 of their last 16 regular season games and 7 of their last 8 games. In the state tournament, IIT with a 19-15 record was second in the six team play-off behind the College of St. Francis and St. Xavier College. The Hawks were finally eliminated in the tournament 1-0 by McKendree College of southern Illinois.

At the end of the season, Coach Carrath was voted Coach of the Year for the State of Illinois and Scott Carpinnelli was selected as an "All-State Shortstop." Special team awards were presented at the IIT athletic banquet. Greg Flores was voted the Outstanding Freshman, Paul Nykiel the Most Improved Player and Scott Carpinnelli the Most Valuable Player. Finally, Chris Maleczewski won the Joe Hoak Award for Courage. Bob Ryley was elected and will be the captain for the 1987 baseball season.

Fall baseball will begin soon. The Hawks will participate in the Chicagoland Fall Classic Tournament at the University of Illinois Circle Campus on September 11-14th.
