Lyman Speaks Before Meeting of A.S.M.E.

"Versatility and Imperialis in the Reclamation Engineering" was presented Friday in a talk by Mr. E. E. Lyman at a meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers there.

Mr. Lyman is technical assistant to the president of the Board of Warden Engineers and has had several experiences as a research assistant. He is also a professor of the Kansas State Agricultural College.

He stated that the young engineer must use specialized methods and development in solving many problems rather than depend entirely on book knowledge. Advances are being made by researchers in all lines of reclamation and many improvements in this line are being carried out by researchers in this line.

Reclamation Research

A note of optimism was expressed for progress in reclamation. A great deal of experience in reclamation is being gained, and projects are now under way for projects in the past few years in many engineering opportunities now being developed.

As another meeting held by the society on Friday the speaker was H. E. Lyman, president of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers at the University of Nebraska, chairman of the Society's reclamation research.

On March 15, H. E. Lyman, the president of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, will present a talk on "Reclamation and the Engineer," at the University of Nebraska, in the course of the Society's educational program.

Announced for May 1, the meeting of the W. E. Lyman will include a talk on "Engineering and Public Works," by Mr. P. C. Davies of the American Association of Mechanical Engineers.

A light wind blew through the field, causing the grass to sway gently. The sun was setting, casting a warm glow over the field. The players were tired, but their spirits were high. They had played hard, and they had played well. They knew that they had won a great game, and they knew that they had made some great memories. They knew that they had played to their full potential, and they knew that they had given their best. They knew that they had played to win.
