Let's Have Interschool Basketball

Basketball games between different schools are over, and a champion team has been declared. One outstanding characteristic, beneficial to the height of the grade, is that every game and effort put in by the players, cannot be neglected: the attendance at the places of games and the interest shown by the students has been more noticeable than any record of any basketball games, with the exception of the championship game of two or three seasons ago. To us, the better student interest is due to the fact that there are more players in the field at various times and in the hands of these players—usually their department classrooms—students are attending games because of the friendly spirit of departmental competition. The reason is that these students have organized a team, a team with a better student body, to decide the victories of the basketball games at Armour possibly indicate the value of interchange of organizations over-inter-class and even inter-activity in athletics. Some of the smaller colleges have gone as far as to withdraw entirely from the basketball competition, more from intramural contests, but it is beyond the scope of this newspaper to comment on the advantages or disadvantages of such a move. Various of the most active colleges have the same attitude because of its surplus position in relation to other colleges.

There are games that are not worth watching because of the few number of players who get a chance to play and become, after the freshman season. The number of students in the gymnasium will be among the cynics of those who run things pretty much their own way. In keeping with the policy of the News to bring the greatest good to the greatest number of students, we suggest that an interscholastic basketball tournament be held and that by some means all-star tournament be given on the basis of class competition. This would require considerable work and cooperation by the students but we feel that if the game involves a larger number of students, a larger number of students will cooperate.

While not entirely suited to intercollegiate basketball, the gym could be used for all practices and games and possibly, the athletic board could obtain the use of the Armour gym for these practices. Doctors and teachers all tell us that an active body is a great aid to an active mind and let's get behind a bigger intramural sport program.

Smokers and Socials

The latest and most interesting of the fraternity smoker has always played an important part in college life, but in these cases it is more or less of a social function. Probably the most popular of the socials is the annual gala, held in the same way, usually at the end of the semester.

Social activities at Armour have been confined to the socials of the fraternities. The typical social has been arranged for the fraternities, and not for the other student organizations. It is not necessary, however, that the fraternities and the fraternities should take the lead in socials.

Our next social will be held by the Brothers of the Delta Tau Delta, on Thursday, October 28th, at 8:00 p.m., in the Armour gym.
