Winning the Public

Secrecy no longer marks: railway administration. The railroads have nothing to conceal. Their records are public property. They aim to win public good will by producing adequate transportation service as efficiently and yet as cheaply as they can and then by letting the public become fully acquainted with both their accomplishments and their problems.

Among the purposes of the railroads in this seeking public good will are these:

To obtain recognition of the fact that good service cannot be performed by untrained personnel.

To make the mystery out of railroading, thereby removing the inevitable results of suspicion, distrust and misunderstanding.

To give the public facts upon which to base informed attitude toward matters of current interest affecting the railroads.

To work toward cooperation instead of hostility in the settlement of questions involving relations with patrons and government agencies.

To arouse an appreciation of the railroads and of sound economic policies that will lessen unjust demands upon them.

To create improved morale among railway employees and thus make for the increased efficiency, economy and courtesy of railway service.

To meet the competition of other railroads and of all other means of transportation.

The response of the public to railway efforts in this direction has been such as to convince railway men that their efforts have been more than justified. The railroads have nothing to sell but transportation, and the good will of the public is of great benefit to them in facilitating its production and distribution.

Constructive criticism and suggestions are invited.
