The Navy Boards IIT

After months of speculation and uncertainty, the Navy has become a reality at Illinois Tech.

To hungry civilian students—who found their cafeteria closed to them because of the Navy's arrival—a very pertinent question was asked: How will the influx of 500 Navy men on the Armour campus be allowed to threaten friendly relationships between them and the other regular students of Illinois Tech? Each group has had time for an opportunity to orient itself for an acceptance of the other's problems.

On one hand, returning civilian students found their Student Union no longer available for either recreation or eating. The lunchroom, which had been rapidly becoming IIT's last informal meeting place, was closed from the daily grind, had been taken from the students without warning.

The answer to the Navy men, on the other hand, was just as big a problem as to where to find the "granda" of a campus similar to ones to which they had been accustomed to in coming to Illinois Tech for the first time, and most of them were college men devoted to what had been their Alpha Mates until the Navy became their school master.

Small wonder then that these men found being taken from various campuses and put into a school which can boast neither clubs or scenic beauty on its south campus.

The civilians hungry and seemingly thrown out of the wagon and the Seamens quartered with that new home—hardly a fit welcome for either group.

Perhaps if it had been pointed out to the civilian students that adequate plans were being made to care for them and to provide them with lunch space, a great deal of their hunger and dissatisfaction on empty stomachs could have been avoided.

And if the hungry civilians had worried less about their appetites and more about their lives, they would have known why they were at Illinois Tech and to them the proviso of the provisorial heart of gold does best the broader end of the Armour campus, things might have gone better.

Also perhaps it should have been pointed out to them that they had been sent here primarily to receive an education, which they will get here regardless of the surroundings. And not only will they get the best education, they will get it in heart of a city that is tops in entertainment and hospitality for servicemen.

It is unwise and hardly be considered a fair criteria for judging future relationships of civilians and sea men. Most of the civilian who come to Illinois Tech are not responsible for prevailing conditions, and wait to accept the sailors as 100% IIT men. Most of the civilians who have a few days to spend in the Navy will probably likewise want to become 100% IIT men.

So while a fitting welcome for both groups was missing, there is still the basis for a common understanding. E.R.J.

Dear Editor:

Efficiency is one of the most desired traits in administrative work. However, at IIT, the staff has repeatedly demonstrated its effectiveness in handling situations in every manner. The student body is always willing to help when the situation arises. After this is done, the room will have to be reoccupied by the student body.

An efficient organization would, if this efficiency is to continue, provide for a system of handling situations in every manner. The student body is always willing to help when the situation arises. After this is done, the room will have to be reoccupied by the student body.

Dear Editor:

A deep campus is nothing that IIT does not have. The reason is the presence of the students. The campus is not a place where the students can meet, as the campus is not a place where the students can meet. The campus is a place where the students can meet.

A deep campus sounds about twenty and probably more than a week at IIT. In order to make the most of the campus, we must study and concentrate in our own way.

The Collegiate World

The students of Moline College for girls, Chicago, announced a $1,000.00 in the latest War Stamp and Bond campaign during the academic year 1945-6. This is approximately $2 per student. Included in that sum are proceeds of all the social activities held during the year.

The first college announcing credit for services is the University of Illinois, which has already granted undergraduate credit to men who have taken military courses dovetailing with their university courses. Extended courses have also been provided for active service, and other vocational courses involving special training will be given credit by the University of Illinois for college credit.

The students in the Secretarial Department of DePaul University, Chicago, who have proved the best students to enter the field of business are those who have studied Latin for four years in the high school.

They are the students who are world-conscious, who are well-educated, who have an understanding of the world's affairs. They should have an understanding of the world's affairs. They should understand roots, meaning, culture, and their practical application.
