ON POLITICS

With the changing in the system of elections, much has been done to close class politics at Armour. In recent years, the way in which the class elections have been conducted has been fairly controllable by the school. The casting of more votes than there are students is a common sight and being beaten with the checkered flag of the college nest. The vote is the only class matter of importance to the students of classes, meaning the elections to be spread over the entire period of the academic semester.

The new officials call for a poll officer to watch over the voting, but since voting has been a common sight on a list or at the next meeting, the vote might be a great deal of work for the class matter. The selection of class officials are to be considered for their work in the class matter. Armour is a large school and class matters must be attended to by a multitude of students. Now that proper action has been taken, we are forced to wonder why such polls are never taken before.

However, there are still many students who want to change the system which are very necessary. The method of nominating candidates is done in some classes, is very unfair. The men in the class at the general class assembly, allowed the choice of the numbers who classmate for recognition, is very liable not to see his party's desire, trying to nominate his classmate until nominations are closed. Whole classes are run through, the majority of which will have no voice in the matter.

After all past politics offered really mean little, but now class politics are to be run in a fair and honest manner. If school politics were concerned with the worth conducting properly. Why not have nominations made in the manner suggested by P. W. Tucker? Have petitions for nomination, signed by at least five students each, with election by ballot, each student voting once. A much fairer representation would be obtained, this would be needed, and rule for closely examined majorities would be ended. The voting system introduced this year is excellent: the nominating system of all classes should be brought to the same level.

EXPRESSION

It is a debated question in Physics whether a device makes a sound unless there is some one to hear it. Can there be sound without reception of it? Similar to this question is one of language. Does a person really think if he can express this thought? Not every one can do this, but can express his thought to someone. The thought is not exactly what the person thinks, but it is a general idea that can be put in language.

Expression students are prone to lose understanding their ability, but, upon the reflection of our mental ability as given to us in the world of our environment. The ability to speak and write, a man's power. With an inferior training he can never have as a power. The three students in expression are all together that we consciously form words properly when we are writing our language. Base words are judged upon our mental ability, but upon the reflection of our mental ability as given to us in our environment. The ability to speak and write, a man's power. With an inferior training he can never have as a power.
