West Campus Will Shift to Armour in Fall
All Arts and Sciences Courses To Be housed In Humanities Building
The transfer of all arts and science work from the west campus before September 1, 1946, was announced today by Professor Henry H. Marden. This is in line with IT's expansion and consolidation on the west campus.

Courses formerly taught at Lewis will be located in the new $800,000 Humanities Building, for which facilities have already been acquired. It will be in use in the fall of 1947, and will extend from State to Darwin streets.

The new comprehensive course will be taught in two main parts: the north and south parts of the campus. The north part will form the basis for the new wide science building on the north campus, and the south part will be used for the new arts and science building on the south campus.

The move announced today is expected to be completed by the end of the upcoming term.

Chase to the Slipstitch—Let the Slipstitch Fall Where It May

After a brief vacation, we again find ourselves confronting a new semester, with new courses, new books, new faces, but the same old jitters.

A few weeks ago, I was in a bar having a beer when a friend walked in and said, "What are you doing here?" He seemed surprised to see me.

"I don't know," I replied. "I'm just here to drink beer and relax." He nodded in understanding.

"What you need is an electric bike," he said. "They're the new thing on campus this semester.

"So, you just need a bike," I said. "That's a great idea!"

"I think you might as well put the mention before the house," the farmer's wife said to her husband.

"But, I'm afraid I don't have any more sandwiches," the customer said. "Can you give me some money for a sandwich?"

"I'm sorry," the farmer replied. "I don't have any money for sandwiches.

"Do you have any money for sandwiches?"

"I'm sorry," the farmer said. "I don't have any money for sandwiches.
