Streakers Exposed Here Thursday

The National Streaker Youth Sports Program (NSYSP) is a federally funded, extra-curricular athletic program being sponsored at IIT and a handful of other colleges and universities across the nation. The program is jointly sponsored here by the National College Athletic Association, the President’s Council on Physical Fitness and Sport, and IIT. NSYSP provides economically disadvantaged youth with additional sports programs.

The NSYSP provides a daily enrichment program, physical education, health examinations, nutrition, and hygiene instruction. According to Ed Glancy, IIT Athletic Director, the objectives of the program are “to teach the young people elementary aspects of the different sports programs.” He said it “is a vigorous sports program,” directed toward enriching the youth’s background in athletic development.

“We want this to be a learning and team-pleasurable experience. We don’t just want them wet in the pool, we want them to swim,” according to Glancy.

Glancy sees the program as “one of the most important and positive community programs IIT has ever offered.” He said that “there are no programs of its kind in the immediate neighborhood.” The 14-16-year-old school needs some place to go.

The success IIT has had with the program is reflected in the rapport IIT has established with the youth and parents participating. Among the other advantages to the youth is the free medical exam and follow-up IIT provides for all entrants in the program.

Meal Ticket Question

Tired of paying for three meals a day when you only eat two? A Technology News investigation has discovered that a two meal a day meal ticket option may be feasible here. The program reduces the price of the three meal a day ticket. According to Robert Jarrell, IIT Business Manager, a two meal a day plan is in the works, but might result in a higher price for the three day ticket. Jarrell said that for now the meal ticket option to be feasible Food Service would have to take in as much money as it does now.

Charles Mattson, head of IIT Food Services, said that the present meal system plans for “no shows” — students who skip meals. This enables the school to charge a lower price for the ticket. Thus, any system that reduced the number of meals offered and correspondingly the number of no shows would cost the school more.

One school which presently has a two meal a day meal ticket option is Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois. Northwestern, Assistant Dean of Students at Northwestern, said that the system is successful and that only 22% of the resident students at Northwestern use the more expensive three meal a day plan.

At Northwestern, breakfast is complimentary and no meals are served on Sunday. The price of board is $558 for 9 months, or $195 with breakfast. According to Tempenhoven, the meal ticket option is successful at Northwestern.
ATS Talks on Constitutions, Library Hours

Another campus student organization was recognized at the ATS meeting last Tuesday. The assembly recognized the Students Against Taxation after its constitution was reviewed and approved by the Rules Committee. The constitution specified the organization's mission, goals, and procedures.

Along other topics discussed were: a resolution to extend parking lot hours, a request to hire a campus lawyer, and a proposal to establish a campus writing center.

New Meal Ticket Option Doubtful

The president of the faculty senate, Dr. Henry Johnson, presented a new meal ticket option to the students. However, some students expressed concerns about the cost and convenience of the new plan.

In Memoriam

Douglas P. Phoebus, a graduate student in Biology, was killed in an auto accident on Monday, March 4. He graduated from IIT in 1967.

Food services was paying the same amount for food with a two meal a day option as it had when everyone had a three meal a day option. Despite the savings, students complained that they were missing certain foods.

Mason said that the two meal a day plan was tried here at IIT during the summers a few years ago. The result was a reduction in student coverage at breakfast for students who had a two meal a day plan.

Dear Editor,

Regarding Open House High School Students at IIT in their last edition in Tech News, High School students on campus. I notice on this edition emphasis placed on Engineering. My trip down to IIT was most rewarding, however my main interest was in Physics. I sat in class, intro Phy, which is my major. I was able to follow the instructions well.

A little shy, but was pleased to participate in class as though it was a part of it.

Look forward to becoming a part of IIT graduating.

Praise

Dear Editor,

Having had the time to digest the IIT pride on myself as well as read those on others, I would like to extend my appreciation for a series of articles, which are in my opinion, a valuable service to the IIT community. While I realize that each of us interviewers would like to have seen things in the treatment of us students, improved or corrected, I am also sure that there is more than the expected subtextive response of anyone who reads about themselves.

With regards to the future direction of Tech News

Sincerely,

Hannah Baker

Dear Editor,

As an interviewer in your series of interviews with incoming students on campus, I would like to say that the series is an interesting addition to the IIT community. The interviews of this type are ambitious and worthwhile. The reason they are so interesting is that they are often variegated, with a consequent risk of stepping on toes. In general, I feel that my interview came out very well and I stopped my interviewers from seeing my shoes were thick enough that I didn't notice. Many of my friends have expressed the opinion that it gave a fair picture and I guess they should know.

There are some minor correction of fact which I would like to make. SPITBOL, is a software package arising from my personal research program. The little plug on my wall are SPITBOL installations and have nothing to do with INCITATION, which is a hardware manufacturing company.

Dr. Robert Dewar

Dear Editor,

Your interview with my husband seemed accurate for the most part. However, I would like to correct one misstatement. He is by my means uncrowded with time of day. He, in fact, has time for himself. Since he always has twice as much to do as he has time for himself, he has to turn down those when he can afford to be for an appointment. The fact that he was only twenty minutes late for his interview indicates that he must have thought it important.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Karin Dewar

Dear Michael,

Here are my comments on the general reactions to the interview series with faculty and administrators at IIT as they were printed in Tech News. The comments reflect my personal views on the article based on the interview with me, and all on my relations to the interview with others that I have seen.

First of all, I think that the ISA of the interview articles are a means of identifying various individuals to the students as a good IIT is a small, private university and, as has been stressed by several individuals in the articles, if it is to achieve and maintain a position of distinction, it will be by way of a high level of excellence in a small institution. One of the qualities of excellence is the involvement of the student body. IIT’s involvement in the student body is not by itself a criticism of the student body itself, but it is a criticism of the student body’s involvement in the institution in the contrast to the cold impersonality of our mass universities.

Tech News, by printing these series, is doing a highly creditable job of keeping this personalized aspect of campus life alive on the IIT campus.

As to the articles themselves, I have no serious objections. If I were a professor in journalism, I could perhaps write a long list of criticisms regarding journalistic style, writing, accuracy, and understanding of the individual subject being presented. But certainly there was not detectable friction or in formation, either well intentioned or malicious, to which one might justifiably object. All the criticism that I could find would be due simply to the fact that IIT is a small, private school, and Tech News writers are not accomplished and trained in writing, but simply people who are trying to become poor critics or reasonable human beings.

I would like to see the series continue, and hopefully, to improve as they go on.

Sincerely,

Emily Haysom  Professor and Chairman  Department of Biology

The Strange Case of Kent Law School

The Illinois Institute of Technology and the Chicago-Kent College of Law merged on September 1, 1989. Today, more than 20 years later, several issues have emerged out of the merger which affect ITT-Kent relations. A few facts: ITT, as always, is barely aware of what Chicago-Kent really is.

Chicago-Kent, the second oldest law school in Illinois, was a leader in the Education of Lawyers movement, and was the alma mater of the famous jurist Emery J. Rule. It was completed 88 semester hours of study. Some of the alumni of Kent include the former governor of Illinois Richard Ogilvie, former Illinois Governor Henry Horner, and Illinois Attorney General William O. Beavers.

Originally, Kent was only an evening school. Later it was merged into Lake Forest College and became the University's law department. The merger was completed during this period and names of the latter New York Chancellor.

Kent recently became known as the University of Illinois at Chicago-Kent College of Law, when several law colleges merged, among them Kent.

The problems that will affect the picture in the late 80's during this period. Chicago-Kent found itself in a difficult situation. The faculty kept turnover lower, as some law schools were not complete. The library was inadequate and a future need for a new building was seen. In the meantime, the Accrediting Association was told to submit new standards which would substantially increase the space requirements and costs of a new building.

Last spring, the Kent faculty members and the Board of Trustees began to explore the possible merger partners, not another university. There were three possible candidates: the University of Northern Illinois, or Roosevelt. For the past year, 1987-1988, ITT had been planning on a law school for the ITT campus. ITT was aiming toward a line of excellent technology, management, and law which was seen as a winning combination for management and problem-solving. The acquisition of an already established law school would move the date of such a combination much closer.

From July 1, 1989, to September 1990, Kent was running on the verge of financial disaster. The merger with ITT was proposed and accepted, with both parties seeing it as beneficial. The merger took place in September of 1990. Kent remained 12 months later that it was no longer in a position to continue to operate the college. The law school was to be named the University of Illinois at Chicago-Kent College of Law.

The elimination of the law school for the ITT campus was to move to a new building on the ITT campus, as was stipulated in the merger agreement. Many at Kent feel that the advantages of a law school in downtown Chicago outweigh any advantages which may be gained by moving to the ITT campus. It was composed of representatives from the Chicago-Kent Advisory Board.

A disinterested observer of the merger might say that the elimination increase plus tuition increase improved the financial picture considerably. The pressing need which had originally helped expedite the merger on the Kent side was thus gone. With its disappearance there were questions Kent about how much the law school in such a new gaining from the merger.

One of the major questions is the comparability for the law school in downtown Chicago. How advantageous which may be gained by moving to the ITT campus, as was stipulated in the merger agreement. Watch your wine

In a letter to the editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, the UFW has called for an end to the practice of using synthetic wine labels.

Of the growers who use the UFW as the greatest offenders, the union lists the following:

- GALLO WINES: Includes all Gala labels that come from the state of California.
- THORNBRIDGE: Includes Bianca, Nebbiolo, Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay, and Syrah.
- GALETTI WINES: Includes the following labels: Espirit, Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, and Syrah.
- GRAND VIE: Includes the following labels: Reserve, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, and Syrah.
- SALVATORE: Includes the following labels: Reserve, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, and Syrah.
- SCAVIGNA: Includes the following labels: Reserve, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, and Syrah.

The UFW suggest that these crimes are committed by those who are engaged in the production of synthetic wine.

Letters

Dear Editor:

Regarding the issue of wine labeling, I believe it is important to highlight the practices of certain wineries that use synthetic labels.

Recently, I came across a wine label that was not clearly marked with the origin of its grapes.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Editor:

I wanted to express my concern regarding the lack of information provided to dorm residents regarding the use of synthetic wine labels.

We are currently facing an issue with some dorm residents who are using synthetic labels on their wine bottles.

Wine Through History

by Wayne Horsec

If your favorite beverage is wine and if your favorite method of enjoying it is the chug, if your favorite source of sustenance is a bag of chips and you are used eating them with the two hands, then you might as well turn to the sports page, because this isn't going to interest you. If, on the other hand, you're becoming bored of the sugar sweeteners of a battle of Homer's Horace, or the unadulterated and unposed flavors of the various Rispens, then perhaps you might be interested, and may even learn something.

Wine defines wine as a fermented grape juice containing varying percentages of alcohol along with other elements that give it flavor. In extension it becomes "the foremost name of a plant product, a product of the vine as a beverage". In either case it is definitely "something that insinuates to intoxicate.

As recently as ten years ago wine was in the opinion of many people, for high social dinner or " uppity " weddings. If you weren't drinking hard liquor you were drinking beer, and that was about the level of it. Then the pop wines started coming out on the market, and they appeared to many young people who had not experienced their parents' taste in beer and still found it difficult to buy hard liquor for at least too expensive. The pop wines became an important part of the youth movement. It was more fun to get drunk without having to drink, and it soon became known that all liquors and beverages in the world only wine could adequately soothe an over-stressed throat.

As the youth movement grew up, so did its tastes. Strawberry Hill was okay if you were just going to sit up top on the dance and watch the sun go down, but for dinner you needed something with a little more class. And so all through the Spruce, Berkley, and Old Town, milkshakes began to be filled surreptitiously with Napa Valley, Chablis, and dry California wines from large fruit jugs on the tables where the visitors could be served with class. Knowledgeable notes would circle the table as everybody remarked on the body of the wine and its marial bouquet.

About this time, wine started to make its entrance into the tastes of middle class America. Just as everybody's parents started buying those three years late, just when above the knees skirts were becoming popular, one place thirty just after the silent majority decided that the vocal minority might be right about the Viet Nam war, wines started creeping into the bridge portions of the neighborhood D.A. R. Matrons on a fling would begin to insist a nip or two of their granddaughters' Zapples, and everybody's father began playing the part of the wine connoisseur.

The prices of wine quickly followed their sales and popularity. Wines that had previously been available for under two dollars suddenly doubled in price. Modesto and Napa Valley wines were demanded, if it wasn't French. It just wasn't wine. Importers and retailers saw their chance, and soon marginal businesses flourished.

The most vile never water could demand a good price, if only it had the word France plastered across its label. The Californian producers got the idea and started vigorously campaigning with the vast amount of good wines that they do produce. The pop wines still commanded a large portion of the market, but the impressive West Coast wines, along with some of the better wines of the East Coast (New York and Pennsylvania), began to make their move into the homes of upper-middle class.

Five Days to Kill

The Last Detail
 Directed by Hal Ashby
 Screenplay by Robert Towne

I didn't know what I was getting into when I went to see The Last Detail in the theater. The story of three sailors with four days to kill is a famous story of violence and revenge. The movie is a classic, and it is easy to see why.

The sailors are on a military base, and they are planning a last-minute escape. They are determined to get what they want, and they are willing to do whatever it takes to get it. The movie is full of action and tension, and it is easy to see why it is considered a classic.

The sailors are played by Art Garfunkel, Norman Reynolds, and William Shatner. The acting is great, and the chemistry between the three actors is excellent. The movie is a great example of how a good story can be told with great acting.

The Last Detail is a classic, and it is definitely worth seeing. If you are looking for a good movie to watch, then this is the one for you.
