Trustee Recognition for ATS?

ATS is attempting to get recognition from the IT Board of Trustees, according to Dennis Trevor, ATS President. "Recognition would add to the awareness of the organization, both in and outside of the Institute. The people who work for ATS would benefit from this recognition." Trevor also said that the recognition would help to attract new members and potential donors to ATS.

ATS, as an organization, has contributed to the Institute in various ways. They have been responsible for the installation and maintenance of the network infrastructure, which has been crucial in maintaining the Institute's operations. They have also provided technical support and training to the Institute's staff and students.

In the past, ATS has been recognized by the IT Board of Trustees for their contributions. However, the recognition has been limited to a formal letter of appreciation and a small token of appreciation. ATS is hoping for more significant recognition in the future.

There are several ways in which ATS can receive recognition from the IT Board of Trustees. One way is by submitting a proposal to the IT Board of Trustees, outlining the contributions of ATS to the Institute. Another way is by participating in the Institute's annual recognition ceremony, where ATS can be recognized for their contributions.

ATS is actively seeking recognition from the IT Board of Trustees, and is working towards achieving this goal. They believe that recognition would help to increase the visibility of the organization, and would be a significant step towards achieving their goals.

If you would like to support ATS in their efforts to receive recognition from the IT Board of Trustees, you can visit their website or contact them directly. Your support will help them to achieve their goals.

In the everyday world of the IT textbooks, it is particularly refreshing to meet an interesting person as Vincent Veereck. Veereck, a political refugee from Czechoslovakia, came to America in 1980, and is now studying electrical engineering at Tech. Like most refugees, he came to America to find a better life that awaited him there.

Veereck grew up in a small town in Czechoslovakia. During his youth, the country was under Communist control. Veereck was brainwashed in school to accept the life the government had forced him to live.

In 1980, a political revolution changed government structure in his mother country. Veereck found freedom of speech, freedom of the media, and freedom to make decisions about his life. A concept he had never realized became real. Veereck remembers the freedom of expression and support those crucial freedoms.

Veereck came to Carnegie Mellon University with the only friends he had in America. Here he got a job as an electrical technician. After working for a year, he was drafted into the army. While in the army, Veereck learned how to speak English and got his United States Citizenship. The government time giving the US citizenship was helping him to pay his way through college and support those crucial freedoms.

We are living in the land of phenomenal quantities. Hamburger by the millions. Chicken by the ton. Steaks by the carload.

An exception is David's. A quality oriented restaurant in the heart of Manhattan. The atmosphere is great, the service is attentive, the menu is extensive.

We recommend the Rib Eye Steak, the Ribs, and the Shep. A combination of skyrocketing costs and a lack of student access.

The lack of student activity here was unacceptable to Ron. He noted only that a few college students should be more than five classes a day. He notes that "I don't want to be bookish but a social dervish."

New Hope New Life

School of Management here is good and improving every year. More students coming to the school.

Ron feels that the school's administration and the students are going to have to increase the caliber of the student body to avoid losing some really good students.

The process of expanding and improving the school life of the campus can only serve to make our life more interesting. There is no excuse for losing Ron and other good students like him.

Money Problems

Martin Raps With Students

At 5:30 p.m. Thursday, October 25, the Student Senate met in the Union Ballroom to discuss the financial situation of the college.

The meeting was called to order by President Martin, who opened the discussion by informing the senators that the college was facing financial difficulties. He stated that the college was in need of additional funds to continue operations.

The discussion then turned to the possibility of raising funds through various means, such as increasing tuition fees and cutting non-essential expenses. The students were concerned about the impact of these measures on the quality of education and the overall student experience.

President Martin assured the students that the college administration was working hard to find alternative sources of funding. He mentioned that the colleges of Science and Engineering were receiving funding from the government due to the recent investments in STEM education.

The meeting concluded with a commitment to work together to find solutions to the financial challenges facing the college.

Responsibility To Students

The recent proposals for a greater student voice in the control and allocation of student activity funds has led to a disagreement from both the Dean of Students Office and various students which are remarkably similar in one respect. This similarity lies in a basic lack of confidence in the student body.

Various arguments on the difficult of setting up such an organization successfully are certainly legitimate, but many seem to question the basic premise on which such an organization would be built: trust in the responsibility of the students. It seems that the idea of trusting more students with the control of some $150,000 is disturbing. Dean Bonfetron feels concern over allowing students such authority. Some students have expressed similar reservations.

The question ultimately comes down to whether the students can be trusted. Problems of structure and organization can be surmounted, but faith in the integrity of the student body is essential. If we are unwilling to take the leap of faith implicit and grant that we can overcome petty individualism in approaching important issues, the problem remains insurmountable. Then benevolent control from above is truly all that we need and deserve.

If students are actually to serve a meaningful educational purpose, if they are not merely meant to impress the outsider with the score of activities available at IIT, then there must be a real, meaningful experience. It is a mockery of any claim of responsibility to the students or to any educational purpose if in practice any student actively is not responsible to IIT administrators rather than to their peers.

William James wrote in 1908 that "democracy is a kind of religion. We are bound to admit its failure." It is far worse to anticipate its failure and give up without trying. It would seem that the reasons we are attending a university demand that we do not surrender our responsibilities to others simply because it is easy and safe.

Dear Editor:

I normally do not write what I think in a hurry, but felt I should pass on the thought to your readers. While the Watergate scandal is ongoing, I believe it is important to consider the potential long-term implications for our democracy. The actions of high-ranking officials and the subsequent revelations have raised significant questions about the integrity of our political system. It is crucial that we address these issues to ensure the continued stability and trustworthiness of our institutions.

HUB: Campus Union

A new plea from the student affairs committee, which has been working on the problem of student conduct, is that students be allowed to do the same thing as they have been rejected on the basis of their conduct. Such a thing would be a “novel insight into the behavior of these students,” according to a committee member.

Lawrence D. Johnson, director of the HUB, agrees that the “novel insight” is needed and should be encouraged. There is no reason why students should not be allowed to do the same thing as they have been rejected on the basis of their conduct.

Dennis Trevor, perhaps representative of both sides of the issue, agreed on one point: regarding whether the HUB is to the student union, changes must be made in the current situation.

An example was made of the Hunter Community College. There, the union building was renovated to better fit the definition of a student union. Student government executive officers were moved next to the dining room, as was the record of their existence. Different organizations in the building were consulted in choosing both color scheme and layout for the various offices and lounges. A versatile area was provided for many meetings and a setting for banquets. While such a wide range of possibilities is not possible at the HUB, it is an indication of the possibilities. For that reason, Johnson has been working on the project, he said.

Another area of the HUB which students claim is not working is the lounges, which have been argued to be dead and should be closed. Johnson, in fact, added that there are students who feel the lounges are a lack of enthusiasm, due to the lack of promotions. That is true, Johnson said, adding that making the lounges popular is a little more of a challenge, but he is working on it.

It is true that the student lounge should be opened on the lounges and be given a better opportunity. Johnson thinks that the situation has been made a little better than it was before.

Soviet Architects

Here

This week, a group of Soviet architects, and interior designers made their first visit to the U.S. and the HUB. The group is the first to visit the U.S., and the students of the HUB are impressed with the work of the Soviet architects.

Arriving aboard a train from the Chicago Union Station, the group was met by the students of the HUB, who were impressed with the work of the Soviet architects.

Upon completing their visit at the HUB, the Soviets returned to the University of Chicago, where they spent an entire day with the students of the HUB.

Now that the Soviets have made their first visit to the U.S., they will return to their country, where they will continue their work.

Due in a federal courtroom on Tuesday last week’s column was completed and taped a \(\frac{1}{2}\) hour before it was mailed. The reporter, in a state of surprise, found myself \(\frac{1}{2}\) hour before he was scheduled to hear the case.

Baltimore: (1-1) at Miami: (4-2): I think I’m safe to say that, for whatever reason, the Dolphins are no longer so far behind in the NFL standings. This game is only the second time in 25 years that Miami lost to the Dolphins in Week 1.

A possible tactical error may have been committed by the Dolphins as they try to achieve a win or lose the game. With their defense still struggling, the Dolphins may lose the game and face another Miami game. The Dolphins are playing against a team that has already scored 12 points in the regular season. With their defense still struggling, the Dolphins may lose the game and face another Miami game.

Dallas: (3-1) at New York Giants: (4-2): The Dallas Cowboys are one of the biggest surprises of the season. After their 1-0 start, they have now won three straight games, including a 28-7 win over the Giants on Monday night. The Dallas defense has been the key to their success, allowing just 12 points per game. With Tony Romo out for the season, the Cowboys will have to rely on their defense to continue their winning ways.

Chicago: (3-1) at Buffalo: (5-1): The Chicago Bears are in a must-win situation this week. They need to win their next two games to keep pace with the Packers in the NFC North. The Bears are coming off a loss to the Giants on Monday night, but they should be able to bounce back against the Buffalo Bills. The Bills are struggling offensively, averaging just 17.5 points per game this season.

Denver: (2-2) at Cleveland: (3-1): The Denver Broncos are in a must-win situation this week. They need to win their next two games to keep pace with the Ravens in the AFC West. The Broncos are coming off a loss to the Ravens on Monday night, but they should be able to bounce back against the Cleveland Browns. The Browns are struggling offensively, averaging just 16.5 points per game this season.

B-Ball

One week in basketball practice, in a conference with a new coach and a lot of new players, a lot of new practices. Joe Bolenfield is the new coach. He has a soft side, good attitude, but he has a lot of experience. The Pelicans are a pair of "5"-"7" players coming off the bench, jumping ability and skill, looks like a good prospect. Forward candidate, forward candidate. He played for the Chicago Bulls last year.

Kevin Klein is a 6-3 guard who is showing the way.

I.M. TOUCH

On Thursday, Oct. 25, Nature’s Way captured the title of defeating NIBS 128-126. The defensive effort in the game was outstanding. On Friday, the Navy’s passing game was also outstanding as they won 126-108. The defense is back to the level of last year, and the offense is still not up to par.

L.M. VOLLEYBALL

Sign-up sheets are due this afternoon. The sign-up deadline for the 1st-12th grade teams is Tuesday, October 20.
Bengals, Steelers To Stomp

From p. 19

The Cleveland Browns and the Pittsburgh Steelers will play a red-hot football game this Sunday at the Veterans Stadium in Pittsburgh. The Browns and the Steelers are both in the thick of the Eastern Division race and a loss by either team could spell the end of their playoff hopes.
